DOMINION DAY SPORTS.

The eighteenth annual Sports Day held on Monday last under the auspices of the Stony Plain Athletic Association at the Exhibition Grounds was an unqualified success from every point of view. The highest expectations of the Committees in charge were fulfilled. It was estimated that a little less than 1000 people thronged the Grounds, having come by every conceivable mode of travel from all the districts within a reasonable distance, and a large quota from the City.

The entries were larger than in any previous year, and each of the events brought out a goodly number of Competitors, and all the numbers on the program were closely contested and certainly furnished enough interest to the Spectators. It was noted that no accident happened to interfere with the days pleasure.

The main feature of the days programme was the base ball tournament and each team certainly did its best to win the prize.

Following are the various events and winners:

The Holiday Season

The summer holiday season has arrived. City and town schools are closed for the long vacation and young Canadian boyhood and girlhood are happy over the prospect of long hours in the open. Thousands of people are moving to summer cottages at lakeside and other resorts, while other thousands, including Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, C.S.E.T., G.C.I.T. and various groups are going into camp.

This is as it should be. Here in Western Canada where long and cold winters make it necessary to keep the houses closely shut for many months, it is of the utmost importance that during the summer months all people, and especially children, should live as much as possible in the open. The health of the people demands it, and every possible encouragement should be given to the development of outdoor life and living, with plenty of exercise and amusement. In the cities and larger towns where it is not possible for many families to get away, supervised playgrounds for children should be created.

There are, however, certain dangers to be guarded against at summer cottage resorts and camps. The sanitary conveniences and arrangements do not exist, as a rule, at such places to which city and town people have been accustomed. There is danger of a too great laxity being developed regarding this all important matter during the camping season, and neglect along this line may easily result, not in an increase in health and strength, but in the development of disease. It is important that strict attention be paid to sanitary conditions by all parents and those responsible for the conduct and administration of summer resorts and camps.

Another matter calling for watchful attention and care is the water supply. People drink more water in the heat of summer than during the cold of winter, and life and exercise in the open further encourages water consumption. The drinking of lots of water is a good thing, providing the water is pure, but danger lurks in every cup if the water is contaminated. Many a case, and even epidemics, of typhoid fever have resulted from an impure water supply at a summer camp. Extraordinary care should, therefore, be taken regarding this matter.

Full advantage should be taken of the summer camping season to instruct boys and girls in the art of swimming. Every child should be taught how to swim. It must be remembered, however, that most children in this country live remote from bodies of water, and are ignorant of the dangers of bathing, and lacking warning and instruction are inclined to take risks which to the informed are nothing short of foolhardy. Young children should go bathing only when accompanied by an adult who can swim. The provision of such a simple safeguard will keep sorrow from many a home and save valuable little lives to Canada. Young children, too, should be strictly prohibited from going out alone in canoes.

Everybody, old and young alike, should be on guard against one thing—fire. If a camp fire is started, take full precautions against its spread and see that the last spark is extinguished before it is left. Smokers' beware of throwing matches, pipe ashes, cigar and cigarette stubs into grass and leaves. Carelessness in these matters may result in enormous loss of valuable property, and even life.

During the summer holidays spent at resorts and in camps, boys and girls should learn to know the flora and fauna of the country and be instructed so that they can distinguish between those that are poisonous and harmful and those having healing properties or are good to eat.

In a word, the summer holiday season should not mean a complete relaxation from all study and the gaining of useful knowledge. True, it is a time for rest, fun and outdoor life and exercise, but while enjoying these, and blended with them, there is a wonderful and beautiful opportunity for learning many things which may prove of immense advantage to a person at some unexpected turn or crisis in their lives.

Locating Ships Automatically

Instrument invented in Austria Considered Distinctly Valuable Austrian inventors have perfected an instrument which automatically and accurately records the passage of any vessel over a given body of water, night or day, to observers who may be located on shore. As an aid in catching smugglers, and a help to coast defence in war time, the invention is regarded as distinctly valuable.

The device consists of a small searchlight sending a ray no bigger than a pencil across the space to be controlled, and a receiving apparatus at the other end containing a light-sensitive selenium cell. Whenever a passing vessel interrupts the rays of the searchlight, the selenium cell closes a relay which starts a bell alarm, or operates a recording device. The instrument was tested recently between two points three and one half miles apart, in the outskirts of Vienna, and the passage of every object, as well as every person, was duly recorded. These tests were made in broad daylight, with a 50 candlepower incandescent lamp as the source of light.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentery, colic and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. A mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Pat's Argument

Pat in an argument maintained that the sun did not revolve round the earth.

"How, then," asked his opponent, "after setting in the west at night, does it rise in the east in the morning? Why, if it does not travel underneath the globe do we not see it at night coming back?" "Have sense, man," said Pat compassionately. "How could we see it in the dark?"

British Law On Solomon Island

Malaita Natives Know Flag Stands for Sternest Justice

Perhaps the queerest job in the world is held by W. R. Bell, district officer of Malaita, one of the Solomon Islands in the Pacific. He is the only white man in a population of 50,000. He rules his little kingdom with 20 police boys. He administers British law with a due regard for the islanders' outlook; he knows that a crime in the eyes of the law may be none in the eyes of a native—that a heavy hand would raise rebellion and a slack one permit it; and so the flag that floats above his canoe stands to the Solomon Islander for sternest justice and most perfect understanding. Malaita is 120 miles long by 40 miles wide.

Methods Used To Secure Best Results In Making Hay From Clover Or Alfalfa

One of the difficulties in the way of the adoption of sweet clover and alfalfa in a more general way throughout the west is the fact that they are more difficult to handle in curing for hay than the grasses. They are much harder to dry out and more subject to damage. While it is hardly accurate to consider the two crops in the same way yet there is enough similarity that the same treatment may be given for both. The difference is one of degree rather than kind. Sweet clover presents the same kind of difficulties as alfalfa but in a much greater degree.

These difficulties are due to a very heavy juicy stem which is slow to dry out and to the leaves which dry very quickly and when dry become brittle and break off. The stems of the sweet clover being much larger and juicier than those of the alfalfa and the leaves fewer, the difficulty is greatly increased with that crop.

Now these difficulties are by no means insurmountable. They have been presented frankly so that new growers of these crops will understand why they have to be handled differently. But if they are handled properly alfalfa at last can be made into the very finest quality of hay, and sweet clover into what is at least reasonably edible and palatable.

The crucial point in curing is the prevention of too rapid drying of the leaves. The moisture that must be expelled before the green fodder becomes hay is mostly in the leaves. The leaves are the means of pumping this out of the stems. So long as the leaves are moist they are evaporating moisture, but when they dry up they are closed as avenues of evaporation, and the juice in the stems remains.

Then the leaves are the most valuable part of these plants for feed. They are rich in food elements and more digestible than the stems. If they become so brittle as to break off, which they readily do, the loss of food value is serious.

The way, therefore to handle these crops is to dry them in coils, and not spread out. They should be raked up and coiled before the leaves dry. In bright hot weather they should be raked and coiled the same day as cut. In cloudy weather the next day will be about right. Hand-made coils are, of course, best, but under present labor conditions hardly practicable if any considerable area is grown. Bunches made by the horse rake are not so good but are very much better than no coiling at all. Small coils are best; large ones become too solid so that the bottom becomes airtight and instead of drying the hay turns yellow. The hay should be left in the coil for several days depending on the weather. In judging of the fitness of alfalfa hay for storage the moisture in the stems should be judged rather than that of the leaf. It should not be possible to twist pieces out of the stems. The day that hauling is to be done, the coils should be upset and the bottoms loosened out a few hours before hauling so that the dampness may be dried out of the lower layers.

In order to make the best use of sweet clover for hay, it may be grown mixed with Bromus grass. This mixture is much easier to make into hay than the sweet clover alone. It is not necessary to mix alfalfa with a grass to make the finest kind of hay. If it is mixed with grass, western rye grass is the best to mix with it.

The Wool Crop

Contracts involving more than 21,000 sheep in Saskatchewan and Manitoba have been received to date by the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers, Ltd. In all, about 325 contracts have been received from sheep breeders, an estimated 170,000 pounds of wool. This is in excess by several thousand pounds of the amount of the contracts filled with the concern up to the first of June, 1922.

Construction in Saskatchewan During the month of April, 1922, the amount of building construction actually started in the province of Saskatchewan totalled $600,081, of which brick buildings constituted $35,000, residential $21,200, commercial $39,000 and the balance industrial.

London's Smoky Atmosphere

Constitutes a Real Problem in World's Metropolis

The injurious effects of coal smoke were explained by Sir Arthur Holbrook in a lecture before the Royal Society in London. He said that almen had asserted they could see and smell a London smoke fog at distances of over 100 miles.

The smoke problem, he declared, has harmful economic, aesthetic and health aspects. In every house now being built only one smoke-producing fire should be allowed, and an effective law in place of the present "insuperable absurdity" should be devised to deal with the nuisance.

Indignation in London against a smoky atmosphere was very old. Sir Arthur said, for in 1597 a man was executed for the crime of burning coal. The damage to buildings was mainly due to the sulphurous and sulphuric acids present in the products of raw coal combustion, their effect being enhanced by uniting with the fatty and adhesive particles of soot.

The elimination of both smoke and invisible impurities was made possible only by the use of gaseous fuel or electricity and the knowledge of fuel experts was now great enough to justify the hope that in the near future smoke would be banished alike from industrial and residential districts.

Manitoba Good Roads

Expenditures on roads in Manitoba this year will amount to $156,500, according to announcement by Hon. W. R. Clubb, Minister of Public Works. Of this sum $272,000 will be contributed by the province, $60,000 by the Dominion, and $223,500 by the municipalities. No extensive provincial highway undertakings will be started this year, and expenditures will be limited to linking up short stretches and repairing bad spots in the roads.

Renovated Butter

Strong Opposition to Dairy Act Amendment Permitting Its Importation

Renovated butter versus oleomargarine was the subject of a debate in the House of Commons in connection with the resolution of Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture, to amend the Dairy Act. The resolution, which proposes to allow the importation, manufacture and sale of renovated butter in Canada, aroused much opposition and after two hours debate the minister proposed that it be laid over, at the same time intimating that he was willing to consider amendments.

Hon. S. F. Tolmie, ex-Minister of Agriculture, led the opposition to the bill, while W. F. Carroll, Liberal, Cape Breton South, who moved the resolution, favoring the sale of oleo, joined in warmly.

"The minister is creating a new industry," said Mr. Carroll; "we used to have people going about crying 'old rags and bottles.' Now we will have them coming about our backyards, crying 'dirty butter, dirty butter.'"

Mr. Motherwell defended renovated butter as a solution of the problem of "a cheap spread on bread," and defined it as "about half-way between creamery butter and oleomargarine."

May Build Railway in China

Reported That Canadian Company May Secure Contract For New Road

According to word received from China, the Northern Construction Company, of Vancouver and Winnipeg, has secured a contract to build 1,200 miles of railway from Canton to Chengtu. Mr. C. V. Cumming, Vice-President of the company, who recently returned from China, will neither confirm or deny this report. It is believed, however, that if the Sun Yat Sen Government can arrange the financing, the undertaking will be assured.

The Atlantic Outlet For The Western Provinces By Way Of Hudson's Bay

Jaffa Is Opposing

Electric Power Plan

Concession Regarded As Political and People Are Rejecting It

A message from Palestine states that for the present there is little prospect of a settlement between the Jaffa municipality and Mr. Rutenberg, who holds the much-discussed concession for the development of electric power throughout Palestine.

Mr. Rutenberg has not yet utilized the water power or other natural resources of the country, but has erected a large power station at Telaviv, near Jaffa. Cables for conveying power have been laid throughout Telaviv, and to the central square of Jaffa, but notwithstanding steady progress in the work the deadlock between the municipality and the Jewish concessionaire is insoluble.

The population of Jaffa, almost exclusively Moslem or Christian, remain uncompromising in their attitude to what they regard as a purely political concession fastened upon the country by certain official Jewish influences. All the efforts of the Government to persuade the population to participate in the scheme have failed, as well as every endeavor to ally the suspicion that the concession is political.

At a meeting of influential citizens of Jaffa it was resolved to oppose every effort by the Government to compel acceptance of the scheme. The people of Jaffa have been wearing ribbons inscribed, "Lamp-posts of Hudson's Bay are a gallows of our race."

Increase In Butter

Official returns from Ottawa show the following increases by provinces of the manufacture of creamery butter in 1922 compared with 1921: Prince Edward Island, 165,016 lbs.; Nova Scotia, 201,728 lbs.; New Brunswick, 66,891 lbs.; Quebec, 4,050,941 lbs.; Ontario, 7,528,468 lbs.; Manitoba, 1,861,337 lbs.; Alberta, 2,126,897 lbs.; and British Columbia, 99,113 lbs.

A FORTY-EIGHT HOUR DAY

Oddest of all days is the meridian day experienced by travellers crossing the Pacific Ocean. "Going westward they lose it entirely, and coming eastward they find it to be 48 hours long. This strange occurrence is in mid-Pacific at the 180th meridian of longitude, commonly known as the "International date line." All ships crossing it westbound drop a day, while those eastbound double a day.

Recently a Seattle reporter ran foul of the 180th meridian and sent broadcast a story that the "President Grant" had broken the trans-Pacific record of 8 days, 18 hours and 21 minutes from Yokohama to Race Rock quarantine station, Victoria, B.C., made by the Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Russia" in 1914. The alleged new record was 8 days, 18 hours and 44 minutes, but the reporter forgot to count the meridian day eastbound, as 48 hours; consequently the ship's actual steaming time was 9 days, 10 hours and 44 minutes. As the "Empress of Russia" counted the meridian day as two days, she still holds the record.

Sidereal time, used by astronomers, is exact for its purpose but is not suited to everyday business on earth. So man invented mean solar time by which an hour is lost for each 15 degrees (or 900 miles) travelled westward, or 24 hours in all during the 360-degree circuit of the globe. Going east 24 hours are gained. As they must be accounted for somewhere to keep the world's time from chaos, the 180th meridian was chosen as the spot. It is half way around the earth from Greenwich, the longitude of which is 0, an appropriate place to lose or gain a day because there is very little business going on in mid-Pacific. The meridian passes through the Fiji Islands, and about 100 miles east of New Zealand.

Commander A. J. Hoskin, R.N.R., of the "Empress of Russia," recently received two medals from France for his heroic rescue of the crew of the French ship Hien, which sank during a storm off the Chinese coast in 1921.

The alternative route upon which (there appears to be) unanimity on the prairies, is that via Hudson's Bay.

It has been promised by Tupper, Laurier and Borden. It is approved by Meighen and King. About $15,000,000 has been spent on the road, and $4,000,000 on its terminal. Construction has proceeded sporadically until the road is within one hundred miles of tide water. There has been little open opposition, yet the men in the west feel there has been but half-hearted support. And now, with the problems of marketing more insistent than ever, there is a concerted movement being fostered throughout the prairie provinces for its completion.

In support of their contention they put forward many strong arguments. One is the fact that such a huge sum had already been expended that to abandon it now would be a shocking waste of public money. An equally strong argument is that the road has actually been financed by the west, being paid for out of a special fund for which provision was made years ago.

Large areas in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba were set aside and the proceeds from which are earmarked for this special enterprise. A statement by the Department of the Interior, submitted in 1922, shows that $23,000,000 has been realized from the sale of these lands, and that half of it has already been paid in cash.

The popular distrust of Hudson's Bay as a route for regular sailings has no doubt had some influence in delaying matters up to the present.

A special Senate inquiry several years ago dissipated some of these misconceptions. It developed that in a century and three-quarters, 750 vessels had entered the bay, ranging from a seventy-gun ship to a pleasure of ten tons and that only two had been lost. This was the face of the fact that all the vessels in question were sailors and hence somewhat helpless in ice. It further developed that the period of navigation is determined not by the presence of ice in the bay itself (from which it is comparatively free) or even in the straits, but in the harbours, ports and roadsteads, in which the services of icebreakers can materially lengthen the season. This would seem to last for about four months, beginning in July. The Senate committee declared that the route was feasible and probably would be profitable, especially if proper aids to navigation were installed.

Given that the route is feasible on the ground of safety of navigation, the prairies have a very strong case based on the tables of distances as compared with existing routes. The distance from Port Nelson, the terminal of the Hudson's Bay Railway, to Liverpool is almost exactly that from Montreal, namely 3,900 miles. This would save the 1,000 miles from Port Arthur to Montreal, as most of the prairie shipping station are as near to Port Nelson as they are to Port Arthur. In conjunction with the Pacific route the use of this outlet would overcome the present congestion and excess freight rates on the Great Lakes, which during last season caused such resentment. It would bring Calgary, Edmonton and Saskatoon more than one thousand miles nearer to Liverpool than is possible by any existing line—John Nelson in Maclean's Magazine.

Land of Midnight Sun

Revelers Throughout Yukon Witness Interesting Phenomenon

The end of the longest day found hundreds of revelers throughout the Yukon out of doors at midnight to celebrate the midnight sun. The big red disk of light swung above the horizon at midnight and started again for the zenith without setting and daylight saving became superfluous.

It is estimated that 10,000 to 20,000 tourists made the pilgrimage this year to the land of the midnight sun. They come from all the coast cities principally, but not a few travelled from farther east to witness the phenomenon.

"You had better leave us," Rexhill said brusquely to Dorothy. "You are not wanted here. Go home!"

While they were talking, Dorothy had looked from one to the other with the contempt which a good woman naturally feels when she is impugned. Now she crossed the room and confronted the Senator.

"Did you tell your daughter that I was caught in your office with Gordon Wade?" she demanded, and before her steady gaze Rexhill winced.

"You don't deny it, do you?" he blustered.

"I don't deny there with him, and I won't deny anything else to such a man as you. I'm too proud for your own sake, however, you would have done better not to have tried to blackmail me." She turned swiftly to his daughter.

"Perhaps you don't know all that I supposed you did. We were in Moran's office, and I was myself—because he felt sure that your father had some criminal purpose here in Crawling Water. We were right. We found papers showing the location of gold on Mr. Wade's ranch, which showed your father's reasons for trying to seize the land."

Helen laughed scornfully.

"Do you expect me to believe that?"

"No, of course not," her father growled. "Come on up to our rooms. Let her preach her rubbish till she is put out." He was on his way to the door when the vibrant command in Dorothy's voice halted him.

"Wait. You'd better listen to me, for it's the last chance you'll have. I

YOUNG FIGHTER MADE WELL

Mother Tells How Her Daughter Suffered and Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Vancouver, B.C.—"My daughter is a young girl who has been having severe pains and weak and dizzy feelings for some time and had lost her appetite. Through an older daughter who had heard of a woman who was taking it for the same trouble, we were told of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My daughter has been taking it for several months and is quite all right now. It has done all it was represented to do and we have told a number of friends about it. I am never without a bottle of it in the house, for I myself take it for that weak, tired, worn-out feeling which sometimes comes to us all. I find it is building me up and I strongly recommend it to women who are suffering as I and my daughter have been."

From the age of twelve a girl needs all the care a thoughtful mother can give. Many a woman has suffered years of pain and misery—has been ailing, nervous, or irritable because of the mother who should have guided her during this time. If she complains of headaches, pains in the back and lower limbs, or if you notice a slowness of thought, nervousness or irritability on the part of your daughter, make life easier for her.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is especially adapted for such conditions.

W. N. U. 1479

have you absolutely at my mercy. I've caught you! You are trapped!"

There was no doubting that the girl believed what she said, and the Senator's affairs were in a sufficiently precarious state to bid him pause.

"Nonsense!" He made his own tone as unconcerned as he could, but there was a look of haunting dread in his eyes.

"Senator Rexhill," Dorothy's voice was low, but there was a quality in it which thrilled her hearers—when my mother and I visited your daughter a few days ago, she gave my mother a blotter. There was a picture on it that reminded my mother of me as a child; that was why she wanted it. It has been on my mother's bureau ever since. I never noticed anything curious about it until this evening."

He looked, with a quiet smile, at Helen. "Probably you forgot that you had just blotted a letter with it!"

Helen started and went pale, but not so pale as her father, who went so chalk-white that the wrinkles in his forehead looked like make-up, against the pallor.

"I was holding that blotter before the looking-glass this evening," Dorothy continued, in the same low tone, "and I saw that the ink had transferred to the blotter a part of what you had written. I read it. It was this: 'Father knew Santry had not killed Jensen.'"

The Senator moistened his lips with his tongue and strove to chuckle, but the effort was a failure; instead, however, appeared much relieved.

"I remember now," she said, "and I am well repaid and quite contented."

"I was writing to my mother and was telling her of a scene that had just taken place between Mr. Wade and my father. I did not write what you need—rather, it was not all that I wrote."—Gordon thought that father knew Santry had not killed Jensen.

"You posted that letter?" her father asked, repressing as well as he could his show of eagerness.

"No. I thought better about sending it. I have it upstairs."

"If you hadn't, of course you could write it again, in any shape you chose," Dorothy observed, crisply, though she recognized, plainly enough, that the explanation was at least plausible.

"There is nothing in that," Rexhill declared, when he had taken a deep breath of relief. "Your clamping of Wade is running away with you. What other—er!—grave charges have you to bring against me?"

"I have one that is much more grave," she retorted, so promptly that he did not conceal a fresh start of uneasiness. "This morning, Mr. Trowbridge and I were out for a ride. We rode over to the place where Jensen was shot, and Mr. Trowbridge found there a cartridge shell which was only one run in Crawling Water. That gun belongs to a man named Tug."

By now Rexhill was thoroughly aroused, for although he was too good a jurist not to see the flaws in so incomplete a fabric of evidence against him, he was impressed with the influence such a story would exert on public opinion. If possible, this girl's tongue must be stopped.

"Proh!" He made a fine show of indifference. "Why bring such tales to me? You'd make a very poor lawyer, young woman, if you think that such runs will see to it that a man of my standing."

"There is a warrant out for Bailey," Dorothy went on quietly. "If he is caught, and I choose to make public what I know and can guess, I am sure that you will never reach a court. You underestimate the people here. I would not have to prove what I have told you. I need only to proclaim it, and I don't know what they'd do to you. It makes me a bit sick to think about it."

The thought made the Senator sick, too, for of late he had seen that things were going very badly for him. He was prepared to temporize, but there was no need for him to contemplate surrender, or flight, so long as Bailey remained at large. If the man were captured, and there was likelihood of a confession being wrung from him, then most decidedly discretion would be the better part of valor.

"Oh, of course," he confessed, "I am willing to admit that in such a community as this you might make trouble, unjustly, for me and my daughter. I am anxious to avoid that, because my interests are valuable here and I have my daughter's safety to consider."

"Don't think of me," Helen interposed quickly. Above all fear for herself, she would be a shame of being beaten by Dorothy and of having her triumph go to the making of Wade's hapless fate. The thought of that kept her far worse to her mind than any physical suffering. "Do what you think is right. We are not cowards."

"But I must think of you, my dear. I am responsible to your mother."

He turned to Dorothy again. "How much do you want?"

"How much? Oh!" She flushed, because the insult, but she chose to ignore it. "There is only one price that will purchase my silence. Tell me where Mr. Wade is!"

"Bliss my soul, I don't know!" the Senator affected a display of injured innocence, which sat oddly upon his hurried countenance. "I am willing to do what I can to save trouble, but I can't do the impossible."

For a moment in a wretched slough of helplessness, Dorothy found her conviction wavering. Could it really be possible that he was speaking the truth; that he did not know? But with the dreadful thought came also the realization that she must not let

There is a new remedy that is very pleasant—it fills the nose, soothes the throat and brings with a healing balm from the throat, soothes the throat and soothes the throat. him father on his mind. She told herself that she must keep her countenance, and she did so.

"There is not a man in Crawling Water who does not believe that Race Moran is responsible for Mr. Wade's disappearance," she declared. "That is another thing that you should consider, for it is one more link in the chain of evidence—impressions, you may call them, but they will be accepted as evidence by my friends."

Rexhill was considering it, and, swiftly, in the light of the visit he had had from Gordon Wade, the fact that the man had left him with a distinct feeling that every word spoken had been meant. "If we could prove it against you, we'd ride you to hell on a rail."

The language was melodramatic, but it seemed very suggestive as the Senator called it to mind. He regretted that he had supported Moran in his revenge. The lawless spirit of the West seemed to have poisoned his own blood, but somehow the feeling of indifference as to suffering personal violence had been left out, and he realized that the West was no place for him.

"Even so," he said pompously, "even if what you say of Moran should prove true, it does not follow that I know it, or am a party to it. Race Moran is his own master."

"You are a party to it," your agent—and you are responsible for what he does in your behalf," Dorothy retorted, coldly. "You are a party to it, and you are responsible for what he does in your behalf."

Helen's cheeks blanched at this. "I do realize it," she said. "There was a slight quaver in the Senator's voice, although he tried to speak with easy grace. 'I assure you, I and I shall be very grateful to you—his anxiety was crowding out his discretion—'If you will help me to save my daughter."

"I say just what I said before," Dorothy went on, courageous in the last. There was, many times, in the woman a finer fibre of courage than runs in the man.

Dorothy regarded the Senator scornfully, her feminine intuition assuring her that he was weakening. She no longer doubted that he knew; she was certain of it and happy to feel that she had only to press him harder to bring the truth from him.

Grateful? For helping you? I am not trying to help you. You deserve any punishment that should be inflicted upon you. You are an evil man. I am offering you your safety, so far as I can grant, only for the sake of the man. If it were not for him, I should not have come here at all."

Her sense of approaching triumph had carried her a little too far. It aroused Helen to bitter resentment, and when she began to speak, Dorothy was sorry that she had not been silent.

"Father, don't do it!" Miss Rexhill burst out. "It is insufficient that this woman should threaten us so. I would rather run my risk, I don't care what she says to me. I won't tolerate such a thing."

You may be urging him to his death," Dorothy warned her. "I will not stop at anything now. If I tell the cattlemen what I know they will go wild. I mean what I say, believe me."

I know you will not stop at anything, I have seen that," Helen admitted. "A woman who can do what you've already done . . ."

"Helen!" The Senator was carrying with him a sense of gratitude toward Dorothy, and in the light of her spirit he was a little ashamed of the part he had played against her. "Let's try to forget what has past. At least, this young woman is offering us a chance."

"Listen!" Dorothy cried out suddenly.

Outside, in the street, a galloping horseman was shouting to some one as he rode. The girl ran to the window and raised the shade to look out. The lusty voice of the horseman bore well into the room. "They've caught Bailey at Seridan. He'll be here tomorrow."

Senator Rexhill," said Dorothy, turning away from the window, "you'd better take the chance I've offered you, while you can. Do it for the sake of the old friendship between you and Gordon Wade, if for no other reason. No matter how bitter he may feel toward you, he would not want you in Crawling Water when Tug Bailey confesses. It would be too awful." She shuddered at the thought. "Tell me where he is and get out of town at once."

"Bailey hasn't confessed yet," Helen cut in gamely.

"No, but he will," Dorothy declared positively. "They'll put a rope around his neck, and he'll confess. Such men always do. Try to remember the position you are in. You'd be sorry if your father were lynched. Go with him, while you can. I know these people better than you do."

The Senator swallowed hard and mopped his damp forehead with his handkerchief. There was nothing to do but follow the girl's advice, and that quickly, he knew. It was all in the face of death, financial ruin seemed a mere bagatelle.

Fox Farming in B.C.

Woman is Pioneer in Profitable Industry At Coast

Vancouver Island is ideal for the breeding of high grade foxes, according to Mrs. Beaumont Boggs, who, nearly three years ago, established the first fox farm on the island. The farm is owned and managed by Mrs. Boggs and her daughter.

With an intimate knowledge of conditions on Prince Edward Island, they have taken an intense interest in the raising and care of their furry charges. Not a single fox has been lost through disease or accident. Chased and worried nearly out of existence in its wild state, Mrs. Boggs declares, the fox leads an easy and well-cared-for life in captivity, and has a painless death by chloroform.

There are now three fox farms on Vancouver Island, and they have all proved the possibility of making the industry profitable.

Mountain-Climbing on Vancouver Island

"Cameron Lake showing Mount Arrowsmith in the distance."

Vancouver Island is becoming famous for many things. Among the chief of these is its climate, among the more utilitarian its strawberries, and among the tourist attractions its marvellous scenery, and magnificent drives, its many fascinating trips both by boat and by rail. But, while tens of thousands of visitors holiday in the island every summer, very few of them are aware of the fact that within less than a day's journey of Victoria there are mountain peaks covered with perpetual snow, and massive glaciers, which defy the warmth of the summer sunbather, where those who enjoy that most exhilarating sport, mountain-climbing, may put all of their skill to the test.

The most popular mountain from an Alpine's point of view is Arrowsmith. It is about six thousand feet high, and to reach it one travels by one of the most magnificent scenic railways on the continent. There is diversity of country all along the hundred miles from Victoria to Parksville. Parksville is on the extreme east of the island, and Victoria, situated at the extreme south of the island is the starting point for the journey.
One of the first summits to be crossed is that of the aptly named Malahat, about fifteen hundred feet above the sea.
Here, from the "Lookout," one looks down on a worderful panorama of green-embowered hills, narrow wild-waterways, the wide stretch of the sea itself and the Olympic mountains on the mainland in their dazzling drives of ice and snow. After crossing the Malahat there are miles along the shores of the salt water, quiet passages through picturesque villages and towns, journeyings among sweet-scented woods which are always gay with flowers.

At Parksville the road divides into one branch swinging toward the west. And there begins the first trek in the journey which leads to the everlasting hills. As one nears Cameron Lake, whether one travels by rail or highway, one sees the beginning of the vast forest of Douglas fir, then which there is no finer stretch of timber in America.

Just across the lake from the Chalet one begins the ascent of Mount Arrowsmith.
The particular day when we made the journey was in early June. It was sweet and cool near the water, the bracken thrusting up brachy and tall, maiden-hair ferns just unfolding, all of the trees and shrubs wearing their new dresses of fresh, young green.

We started at noon, and from the very outset, found the trail fairly steep. When only occasional steps for breath, we pushed on for five hours before we made the Rut, a distance of about 3000 feet up. It was rather early in the year for mountain-climbing and the trail had not been cleared since the winter storms, which made our going rather more difficult than it would otherwise have been. But every step of the way displayed some magnificence of scene that called forth exclamations of "Well, well!"

The Hut was practically buried, for the snow lay deep on the upper reaches. It took us an hour or more to turn it into it, for, although our packer had gone ahead with the blankets, he could not accomplish much alone.
But we finally dug our way in, cleared the snow from the windows, made a fire, and before very long the aroma of boiling coffee and fried ham filled the little cabin, and we sat down to eat with ravenous appetite.

The climb comes to one on these high, snowy glaciers, far above the silences of sound of life, is deep, dreamless and difficult. We were at eight thousand feet, full of our sense of the climb, the climb, hick from shore on is a real test of strength and endurance.

The first five hundred feet were very steep, and not without danger for the unwary. We had a few tumbles, and slides, which only added to the enjoyment, and when we had pursued our journey to the end our satisfaction was very great. For it was an objective worth striving for.

The view was grand beyond conception, snow-peaks all about us, dazzlingly splendid in the sunshine, clouds of mist lifting from the valleys, and rolling away to give a glimpse of lakes blue as periwinkle, of bare cliff-sides outlined with the tints of the rainbow, and bright, green valleys, and forests of sturdy little jack-pines, while now and then when the clouds would roll up and melt into the blue of the sky, we could glimpse a farther view, and we said it was the sea and the mountains beyond the sea, but the distance made it almost as vague as a half-forgotten dream.

It is a journey that one can easily make within the day, providing there is no misadventure, and it is a most joyfully exhilarating climb, while the picture which the summit discloses must always stand out conspicuously in the gallery of one's memories.

Virgin Islands Have Three-Year Drought

Petition U.S. Government For Money To Build Reservoirs

The Virgin Islands, which the United States bought from Denmark in 1917, have suffered greatly in the last three years from lack of rain. Both the sugar cane and the cattle industry, on which the prosperity of the islands largely depends, have been near complete failure, and the commerce of the islands has been at a low ebb. The islanders are asking Congress to appropriate money for a system of dams and reservoirs to preserve the islands from future mishaps of the kind.

THIN, IMPURE BLOOD

Means a General Weakness and Loss of Health

If people would realize the importance of keeping the blood rich and pure there would be less disease. The blood is the means through which the nourishment gained from food reaches the different parts of the body. If the blood is impure, the nourishment that reaches the nerves and organs of the body is tainted with poison and disease follows. The blood is also the medium by which the body fights off disease. If the blood is thin and watery the power of resistance to disease is weakened. If you are weak and run down, if your nerves are tired, if you lack ambition, have no appetite, and are short of breath after slight exertion, the trouble is almost always due to poor blood. In cases of this kind you should take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to build up the blood. They help to enrich and purify the blood from first to last, dose, and in this way bring new health and strength to weak run-down people. Mrs. John Timmon, Elmville, Ont., tells of the benefit Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were to her, as follows: "I became very weak and was hardly able to walk and had to be helped upstairs. I had no appetite and slept poorly at night. I finally went to a doctor who told me the trouble was lack of blood, and that my condition was serious. He gave me medicine, which I took faithfully, but did not improve. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and did so, and after I had taken two or three boxes felt that they were helping me. I could eat better, and I slept better. I continued using the pills for some time longer and quite recovered my old-time strength and feel that I have to thank Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that I am not an invalid today."

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail, post-paid, at 50 cents a box, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

New Rumania Capital

Hermannstadt Is Considered Much Better Location Than Bucharest

Hermannstadt, a city in Transylvania, 15 miles northwest of Bucharest, is being considered as the new capital of Greater Rumania. For a long time many Rumanians have felt that the enormously increased frontiers of the country demanded a capital nearer the western states of Europe than Bucharest. They want to make of Hermannstadt, which in Rumania is called Sibiu, a sort of executive capital.

Hermannstadt was founded in the twelfth century, and has been splendidly developed by the Austrians. It is thoroughly modern and has a series of fine public squares, parks, schools, churches, libraries and theatres. It is much cleaner than any of the cities of Old Rumania, and has a much more healthful climate.

Red Cross Outpost

Sick Trappers to Have Hospital in Northern Saskatchewan

To provide a haven where sick trappers, half-breeds and other natives of the northern woods of the province may rest and receive medical treatment, and to provide a maternity home for the wives of settlers, residents of Big River, a town at "the end of the steel" north of Prince Albert are busy at work remodeling an abandoned hospital that was once an adjunct to a lumber camp. When alterations are completed the hospital will be opened as a Red Cross outpost.

The opening will probably not take place until fall, as that is the time when the north country begins to show signs of activity. A hospital is needed constantly during the winter, for scarcely a week passes that there is not a case of frostbite or other accidents.

Auto Monopolizes Accident Column

Horse Used to Attract Attention as Source of News

A horse ran away in Perth County a few days ago. The driver was thrown from the buggy and was instantly killed.

Is the horse coming back into the accident columns of the newspaper? Many people may have forgotten that there was a time when the horse contributed liberally to the news of the day. That was before the coming of the automobile. For a time, while the automobile was seeking to establish itself, the horse continued to fight for recognition, but eventually he seemed to give up the struggle and in time he ceased to attract attention as a source of news. The automobile acquired a monopoly as a cause of traffic accidents. Even the railways recognized that a change had come and they settled down to the business of carrying people instead of killing them, with occasional protests.

It seems necessary to remind the present generation that before the age of motor vehicles there were accidents.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review
